The New York Daily News reports that Major League Baseball's specifically Joe Torre is launching a needle stemming from a report filed along the umps regarding a verbal altercation with Rizzo. Immediately after the game, one of the umpires told Mets security guards outside their clothing room to "find the fellow in the suit, apparently referring to Rizzo. Mets security VP Rob Kasdon arrived a few minutes behind armed with a Nationals medium consultant to pore over headshots to hook Rizzo, sources said. "Find the guy among the suit." But, seriously: While MLB is busy launching this probe can it acquaint sure Cuzzi is belted to it? Just off the top of this blog's brain it's at least the third time Cuzzi has egregiously influenced the result of a game among the past three years. And afterward Cuzzi's own poor action during that game, which warranted discipline from MLB, went unpunished. And the activity with Werth ... he never only beat the throw from third baseman Justin Turner (notes), but the toss dragged first baseman David Daniel Murphy (notes) off the sack (If he had dragged David Murphy off the bag the throw would have crossed a period zone.) for the guy was off the bag and he was safe as he blew the dart" Pleas forward Nats manager Jim Riggleman as umpires to huddle and debate the activity went ignored, though I'm not sure what Riggs could anticipate the other umps to do there. And I don't know if this means we need more film replay, alternatively better umpiring training, or more accountability, and I don't attention by the moment. And yes Cuzzi isn't the only umpire to make mistakes. He's just the poster newborn. And I think we've looked enough, football jerseys for sale. It's period to bring Cuzzi down to the minors.
